Days 2 - 3: Kaziranga NP

Early this morning we take our positions with camera's ready in shared jeeps or canter (or on elephant back - subject to availability) for morning and afternoon game drives through the park.

Kaziranga National Park lies to the south of the mighty Brahmaputra river and being on the floodplains is inundated heavily by the monsoon rains. The predominant vegetation is a mixture of tall grasslands and riverine forests. There are many marshes, interconnecting streams and ox-bow lakes, known locally as 'bheels' or 'bils'. To the south of the park lie the Mikir Hills which rise to over 1,000 metres elevation. Kaziranga is famous for its Indian Rhinoceros population which is estimated at 1,100 + and is by far the best place to see them in India. (this species is unique to the subcontinent, with the second largest population of 400+ found in Chitwan, Nepal).

Other large mammals include the Water Buffalo, Swamp Deer and Gangetic Dolphin. The park may be explored by riding on elephant back or by motorised vehicles. There are several watch towers located throughout the park that assist with viewing. The nearby Panbari Reserve Forest is the best place to see the Hoolock Gibbon - primates with similar features to monkeys.

Kaziranga has a rich birdlife. There is a colony of Spot-billed pelicans and the rare Bengal Floricans inhabit the grasslands. This area is also known for the famous Assam tea and during the winter and spring it is worthwhile visiting the nearby tea plantations to see tea leaves being picked and processed.
